North Pocono

Instead of hanging out at the pool or taking a road trip, one senior from North Pocono High School spent his summer researching and working alongside doctoral candidates at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

Jordan Newman was chosen to work as a paid intern in a genetics research laboratory at the university, aiding in research involving treatment of cardiac ischemia that would prevent the condition from developing into a heart attack.

Jordan helped compile the information, which he then presented at the National Institute of Health's conference on Anti-Cancer Drug Development.
